Crash Course in US Law for Overseas Operations

Overview of risky violations of key U.S. laws in overseas operations

In the global economy opportunities come fast, forcing organizations to act on impulse and leaving them exposed to many unforeseen risks. Many organizations are quick to send representatives into international trade without adequate training on key U.S. laws. Whether they are trying to sell in a new market or export from a foreign country, organizations that are well versed with certain U.S. laws already have the ability to mitigate many of the risks associated with operating overseas. These laws are broad encompassing, often not directly related to business operations and can be detrimental if not properly adhered to.

Small and medium-sized companies can greatly advance their ability to navigate the complex waters of our globalized economy through proper training in U.S. law in overseas operations. Furthermore, preparing employees with knowledge of these laws reduces risk to them and their jobs.

Crash Course in US Law for Overseas Operations is designed to prepare organizational representatives with the necessary knowledge to operate on an international scale. The resulting skill set will enable employees to identify a myriad of red flags that can otherwise put the organization and themselves in jeopardy. Critical laws that are addressed are:

- Foreign Corrupt Practices Act
- U.S. Trade Sanctions
- Export Controls
- The Patriot Act
- Anti-Boycott Regulations

This course is recommended for individuals in almost any role within an organization that has or plans to have overseas operations. Along with covering the most pertinent compliance areas in international U.S. law, attendees will gain valuable insight into the global economy.
